

Marsh 17, 1958

Dear Roger:

I am very sorry that Rotman's paper has caused you so much grief. As you have no difficulty in appreciating, English is not his native tongue, and the circumstances of submission of the ms. were somewhat hectic.

If you feel that the paper would be accepted if corrected for grammar and neatness, I can suggest an arrangement that will take the burden off your hands. Rotman would not have secretarial help that could cope with the English language. Rather than return it to him, with the time it would take, and his own difficulty with grammatical construction, I suggest that you send it to his sister: Dr. Raquel Bussman, Biology Dept., Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. I phoned her, and she said she would take care of the task. I think she could accept the responsibility, even better than I, of straightening out his language. I am afraid I would just be unable to get to a similar task myself for at least a couple of weeks.

Yours sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg